NEW CEMETERY GATES
ARRIVE AT MACK'S MILL
The handsome iron gates ordered some time ago have at last arrived and been set up at the Mack's Mill burial ground in East Lyme. These gates are the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Way Chapman of South Lyme and are a memorial to Mr. Chapman's grandfather, Capt. Daniel Watrous. This old ground has been most fortunate in the circumstance given by Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, the fine front wall given by the late Nelson Rogers and others, and the care it receives from the Scott Brothers. This finishing touch of the new gates changes what was once a sadly neglected spot into a beautifully kept and perfectly appointed resting place of the departed.

AUCTIONEER TESTIFIES IN SUIT OVER COLCHESTER COWS

Brown of Colchester, the auctioneer who sold the cows which are the basis of a suit brought by Roger Poole of Lebanon against Max Kaplan of Colchester to recover $550 for the death of the cows, took the stand in the court of common pleas Thursday morning at New London, where the suit is being tried before Judge Charles B. Waller and a jury. The plaintiff claims that the cows were diseased when he purchased them and that they were represented as healthy. Brown was the first witness for the defense. He testified to being engaged by Armstrong and David Mulcare, automobile accessory dealer in that city, several months ago. Rice was convicted of murder in the first degree and a motion for a new trial was denied.

took place on Feb. 10, and that Mr. Kaplan told him at the time that he knew nothing about the condition of any of the cattle, which had been purchased from farmers in the surrounding country. The witness declared that he gave no guarantee when auctioneering off the cattle and that he stated in opening the auction that the cattle were to be sold "as they stand and as they wear hair," which is an expression used in selling and auctioneering off cattle when no special representation is made as to their quality, health or condition. The witness denied that he represented that the cows which were bought by the plaintiff, or anyone else, "would give 10 quarts of milk" or "freshen in the spring." Mr. Brown declared that the cows would have brought from $175 to $250 if he had made such representations instead of the $30 or $40 they did bring.
